THE DOLOMITES

The Dolomites, immersed in a tropical sea, emerged only 70 million years ago. Worked and sculpted by atmospheric agents, today they represent a magnificent geological treasure and give the landscape an incomparable beauty. The particular type of predominant rock, the dolomite, gives the mountains a particular light hue, so the Dolomites also take the name "Pale Mountains". At dawn and dusk, the dolomite assumes a color from pink to red fire: the phenomenon is called Enrosadira and is particularly visible in summer evenings. The Ampezzo Valley is the ideal place to enter and discover a unique world made of vertical walls, green valleys, mountain pastures, forests, streams, lakes, canyons and waterfalls.
